You can also use this method of zooming by pressing the Zoom in button on the app's toolbar. 2. Hand Tool You can use the Hand Tool to move your selection with a hand on the photo. If you press and hold your finger on the image, it will enlarge. When you are done, click away. You can move back and forth using the buttons on the toolbar. 3. Workers Comp Blog The OSHA Right to Know Poster Reporting System While working in your community you may be expected to answer a call or make a visit to an accident site. Since the OSHA Right to Know Poster Program was implemented, employers and workers have the opportunity to report the details of the injury, not only to OSHA but to themselves through this online reporting system. The OSHA poster is a commonly found tool in public places and is meant to serve as a means for individuals to report worker safety, health and illness conditions. To report an accident it is only necessary to locate one of the OSHA posters, and one will always be placed at the accident scene and at the place of the incident. At the accident scene, the poster will either be located on a sign on the victim, or the poster will be placed on the ground. Some of the posters are affixed to poles or posts in public locations to provide the public with information about an impending accident. The poster is a common tool used by OSHA inspectors to verify the presence and location of the poster. The information provided within the poster is very concise, easy to read, and brief. An employee of the employer can make a report within minutes of the accident. When reporting an injury, it is very important to include the time, date, work shift, and the level of the injury that occurred. The OSHA posters are meant to be available at any given location, so it is important to keep the poster and continue to maintain its proper location. Vandalism of the poster is a violation of OSHA law, and when employees or others see a poster that has been purposely torn or defaced, they should notify OSHA immediately. The poster is a means of communication that is meant to be available to the public, and OSHA will exercise its legal right to use the Right to Know poster. There is no requirement for an inspector or employee to be present when a poster is being reported. Without the use of the OSHA poster, the employer would be required to investigate the accident site and submit a report to OSHA. Since the Right to Know poster is available at any given place, the reporting of injuries is easy and efficient. The poster is a helpful and a cost-effective way for workers to report accident sites and injury conditions. NEWARK – Robert Frost once wrote: "He who hastes to be rich may get a wealth, but will surely miss what makes life worth living." However, some of New Jersey's greatest authors have made it abundantly clear that their goal is to better the lives of readers. "My goal is not to just be a writer, but to be a beloved writer," said Paul Auster, now living in North Carolina. "The kindness of people is always amazing to me. I never expected it at all." Formed in 2003 as an annual literary journal, now the New Jersey Literary Festival holds more than 70 events from October through April, featuring readings, staged readings, workshops, panel discussions, book signings, and other events. This year's festival kicks off Friday with the opening of an exhibit of the work of The Black Madonna Co., featuring the works of 12 authors, including Tom Hanks, Van Morrison, and comedian Bill Murray. The festival will run through April 25 at venues throughout the state. "Every year we try to meet new and interesting authors. Writers are just people, and we get to sit and talk with them, get to share in their thoughts and feelings," said festival founder Karl Kacher, a retired judge and former president of the American Bar Association. "We have come to a point in this country that writing is extremely important. Without writers, we wouldn't have the words to describe the things that happen in our lives." Author Robert Poliquin Highlighting the festival are two major authors who have made notable contributions to literature. New Jersey's Robert Poliquin, who is also the State Librarian of New Jersey, will lead a reading and discussion of his memoir "Red Dragonfly" and his new novel "Bath." "Bath," the final book in Poliquin's acclaimed "Down River" trilogy, follows the life of Agnes Evans, who is released from a jail in the first book, but who, along with her family, faces an uncertain future, which leads to the old mill and home of her youth where she must decide whether to return for a reunion. "Red Dragonfly" looks at the horrific crimes committed by Mary Phagan, the first female to be hired as a full
